

The project was concerned with the transfer of knowledge and technology to developing countries, and aimed to support the goals of the Global Water Initiative by adjusting, testing and implementing an integrated regional model for the strategic planning of water resources management in twinned river basins. The regional model would assist planning authorities and decision makers to assess the impacts of economic and technological development, and the effects of global climate and land use changes on the long-term availability and quality of water bodies.

Links:

<http://www.rivertwin.org>